"A lightly comic novel as splendid as Peter Cameron's The City of Your Final Destination is a cause for celebration. A beautiful and elegant novel in which slightly bewildered characters are stirred by love . . . [it] has the lightness and airiness of Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream. Driving the narrative is Cameron's delightful touch – his beautiful lines and comic scenes, his facility for revealing characters through grace and economy, his witty dialogue. One would be ...

The City of Your Final Destination, based on a novel by Peter Cameron, has a literary concept even more page-bound than their usual productions, so director James Ivory and screenwriter Ruth Praver Jhabvala--longtime producing partner Ismail Merchant died in 2005--truly have their hands full. The setting is a country estate in Uruguay, the former home of a celebrated writer who committed suicide on the property. The survivors have repeatedly turned down the requests of a would-be ...

In adapting Cameron's novel, longtime Merchant-Ivory screenwriter Ruth Praver Jhabvala keeps her focus on the academic Omar Razaghi (Omar Metwally), a University of Kansas English graduate student who journeys down to Uruguay to meet the family of the late minor novelist Jules Gund. Omar wants to write a biography of the late author- and his academic and financial future depend on it- but the family has thus far refused their permission.

"Peter Cameron's What Happens at Night is a surreal, funny, heartbreaking story about love and mortality. Cameron's sense of balance between the comic and the catastrophic, between cynicism and sincerity, is astonishing.
