The only thing that I didn't really like about The Secret by the Lake was the romance. It felt a bit immediate and I didn't really get it at first, but it ended up being quite sweet (and furthered the plot!) This story was just so atmospheric. I can't even explain what it was like to read it and be sucked into this world. Louise Douglas has done a brilliant job with it, and I'm looking ...

Secrets on the Lake near Montville Queensland is so special it is hard to put into words. Every Treehouse is themed and individually styled with beautiful red cedar carved into tables, seats, cupboards, benches, cabinets and decorative carvings for useful items like toilet roll holders. Everything was so private and done with excellence from the spa baths in each unit overlooking Baroon Dam to the croissants or muffins delivered each morning hot and fresh. Even the walkway railings leading ...

From that developed a desire to write for children herself. Her own children and those of her friends provided a rich source of inspiration, and stories such as Sam's Surprise, You little monster and Two in a room resulted. Along the way she discovered that many children prefer non-fiction to fiction.

The Secret By The Lake is her sixth book and her best by far with echoes of Emily Brontë (someone outside at the window trying to get in), Daphne du Maurier (strange waterside dwelling and dead bodies) and Margaret Atwood (psychological thriller) with some exquisite descriptive prose and a polished plot. Set in the early 1960s with flashbacks to a former age it starts with a 'stolen ...

The name is a slight oxymoron considering it's not really a secret and it's not an actual lake, but it is still beautiful. When I asked my parents about it they told me they used to go there long before they even had kids, but recently with the input of Facebook groups the lake has been re-discovered and has become something of a community project.
